Arizona Tile Supports Industry-Related Organizations

TEMPE, Arizona (March 4, 2009) – Professional organizations are important to many industries and the stone and tile industry is no exception. These organizations help professionals keep in close contact and learn from each other. Although the stone and tile industry touches all corners of the world, at the local level it is a tight-knit community that includes manufacturers, distributors, builders, designers, architects and contractors, to name a few.

Arizona Tile is proud to support these organizations. The company has been involved with such trade partnership organizations for many years and appreciates what they provide to the industry. Arizona Tile representatives are active industry members of many trade organizations throughout the country.

Some of the industry partnerships and organizations Arizona Tile is involved with include:

- AIA – American Institute of Architects (national and regional)
- ASID – American Society of Interior Designers (national and regional)
- BIA – Building Industry Association
- IIDA – International Interior Design Association
- NAHB – National Association of Home Builders
- NKBA – National Kitchen and Bath Association

The company has been recognized for its involvement through various awards on a national and regional level. Several people companywide hold memberships, as well as leadership positions, in several organizations which helps both Arizona Tile, and the industry, to learn from each other and maintain open lines of communication for the betterment of the industry.
